Stroke patients make strides with video game therapy

Health and technology. A new experimental method helps people who have suffered strokes.

When Fred Watson had his stroke he thought it was just a passing leg cramp.

Collapsing to the ground, it wasn't until Watson couldn't pick himself up, or feel his face, that he realized something was wrong.

"Fortunately I had my cellphone nearby, and I lay there on my side, hit the button and dialed 911," Watson recalled. "They asked if I could come downstairs to open the door and I said no. The young lady on the line told me to hang on and that they would find me — and sure enough I could hear them downstairs. They broke into our house!"

A year and four months later, Watson, who lost the ability to control the right side of his body, is sitting in an ornately crafted room that's been stuffed to the brim with robotic arms and computers while classic rock pours from some unseen speakers.

Watson, however, isn't using any of these larger devices. Instead he's sitting in front of a tablet com-

This video game is Watson's stroke therapy, a new experimental method that the Burke Medical Research Institute in White Plains is spearheading.

"I was really interested in trying to develop something that was easy to use, a very low-cost kind of fun and hopefully would help people get better," Dr. David Putrino, director of telemedicine and virtual rehabilitation at Burke told Metro. Putrino explained that he found the "low-cost" and "fun" answer in a developmental collaboration with programmers from City College New York.

Watson is one of a small group of patients Putrino and his researchers have been working.

"I have to say that this kind of therapy is new to me and it's really working," Watson explained. "I know from other patients in the hospital with me, who aren't as fortunate as I am to get this therapy, they've gone through six weeks of work in other therapy and went home and were stuck having to figure the rest out on their own."

Busted. Teen arrested for groping child

A 16-year-old Brooklyn boy has been charged with stalking, sex abuse and forcible touching for the daylight groping of an 11-year-old boy in Bed-Stuy, according to the NYPD.

Brian Montes was also hit with two other charges — attempted luring of a child and endangering the welfare of a child.

The entire incident which occurred outside 551 Flushing Avenue at 9 a.m. Sunday was caught on surveillance video.

It shows the accused walking up to a young boy and grabbing his groin. The victim runs away and the suspect is then seen casually crossing the street.

Police say the victim was not physically injured. METRO

Fight for $15 sweeps city and nation

Protests. Organizers said yesterday's actions in 230 cities across the world were the largest protests since the Fight for $15 movement started more than two years ago.

Thousands of fast food and other low-wage workers took to the New York City streets on Wednesday to demand a $15-an-hour minimum wage and the right to unionize.

Protesters, joined by union leaders, college students, other low-wage workers as well as Black Lives Matter activists, staged a die-in on the sidewalk McDonald's at 71st Street and Amsterdam Avenue during the lunch rush, temporarily closing the store.

"$8.75 ain't cutting it at all," said Raymond Nevill, a 22-year-old Papa John's worker from Brooklyn. "It doesn't leave anything left over for transportation or saving. Nothing."

Columbia Class Confessions prompts crowdfunding site

Fess up. A college Facebook page has led to microlending site for low-income college students.

What started as an anonymous forum for first-generation college students to air their grievances is now a call to action to fund students in need.

Columbia Class Confessions, a Facebook page launched in March, allows students to discuss the social and economic difficulties those who are the first members of their families to attend college face, including access to food during breaks when the dining hall shuts down, and being able to afford textbooks.

Inspired by the response, a campus group called First-Generation

College Students (FLIP) launched a crowdfunding site to address some of the concerns raised on the page. By Wednesday evening, the campaign had nearly reached its $2,500 goal.

Toni Airaksinen, a Barnard College freshman and FLIP member said that although her family relied on public assistance when she was growing up, she is "relatively privileged" compared to her first-gen peers.

Airaksinen was inspired to launch the page after attending a conference for first-generation students studying at Ivy League schools at Brown earlier this year.

"About 200 people in the first week contacted the page and (FLIP) board members, saying 'I'm seeing people aren't eating, going without medication. How do I help? I want to help,'" Airaksinen said, adding the group received "overwhelming support."

The different funding levels, ranging from $10 to $250, can fund emergency room visits, counseling center co-pays, groceries — even the cap and gown

The organizers say that about 30 percent of Columbia undergraduates receive Pell grants, federal need-based grants that do not have to be repaid, to afford the $66,604 annual tuition.

Police in Pennsylvania said on Tuesday that the tombstone of Hillary Clinton's father had been knocked

Bad flight. One person was detained in the security incident.

A small helicopter landed on the west lawn of the U.S. Capitol with a single occupant aboard on Wednesday, and one person was detained, U.S. Capitol Police said. Nearby streets were temporarily closed as police investigated, according to a police statement that called the craft a "gyro copter."

The copter resembled a small, open-air helicopter with a single rotor on top.

The security scare comes after a man shot himself dead in front of the Capitol on Saturday sparking a temporary lockdown.

In January, a small "quadcopter" drone crashed onto the White House lawn. The man who was operating it did not face criminal charges.

Aaron Hernandez gets life for murder

Former National Football League star Aaron Hernandez was sentenced to life in prison on Wednesday for murdering an acquaintance in an industrial park near his Massachusetts home, concluding the first of two murder trials he faces this year.

A Massachusetts jury found Hernandez, 25, guilty of first-degree murder in the June 2013 slaying of Odin Lloyd, who had been dating the sister of Hernandez's fiancée at the time.

During the trial in Bristol County Superior Court in Fall River, the two men were described as having been in the early stages of friendship, but Hernandez soured on Lloyd after he hung out with people the former New England Patriots tight end disliked.

Europe votes to call 1915 massacre 'genocide'

The European Parliament backed a motion on Wednesday calling the massacre a century ago of up to 1.5 million Armenians a genocide, days after Pope Francis used the same term.

Although the resolution repeated language previously adopted by the parliament in 1987, it could raise tensions with Turkey. The Turkish Foreign Ministry accused the parliament of attempting to rewrite history. Turkey agrees Christian Armenians were killed in clashes with Ottoman soldiers in 1915, when Armenians lived in the empire ruled by Istanbul, but denies that this amounted to genocide. REUTERS

China could use exclusion zone to expand clout

China could eventually deploy radar and missile systems on outposts it is building in the South China Sea that could be used to enforce an exclusion zone over the disputed territory, the U.S. military commander for Asia said on Wednesday. Admiral Samuel Locklear, speaking at a congressional hearing, described as "aggressive" the land reclamation and construction projects China has been conducting at eight military outposts in the South China Sea.

The work involved "fairly massive" reclamation in the Spratley archipelago and upgrades to facilities in the Paracel Islands. REUTERS

Iran: Deal depends on sanctions lift

Iran said on Wednesday it would only accept a deal over its contested nuclear program if world powers simultaneously lifted all sanctions imposed on it. F. SCOTT SCHAFER

Bill Nye: Earth Days 45 years apart

Exclusive. Bill Nye, of “Science Guy” fame, gears up for Earth Day.

By the spring of 1970, Cleveland’s Cuyahoga River had caught on fire, disabling a couple of railroad bridges. Dozens of people had been killed in their sleep by industrial air that descended on Pennsylvania towns at night. Like my dad, I was a Boy Scout. I could tell nature wasn’t what it used to be. The U.S. had become a deadly place — for black leaders and anyone who wanted to drink the water or breathe. So when Earth Day was organized I was all in. As a native to what was the small town of Washington, DC, I rode my bicycle all the way down to the Washington Monument and the big Earth Day stage. The speakers were trying to shake us up, to get us all talking about our planet. And it worked. The Environmental Protection Agency was created along with the Clean Water Act, the Endangered Species Act and other environmental legislation.

This is the 45th Earth Day, and I hope it’s the biggest one so far because, today, even the horrific ongoing effects of pollution are being overwhelmed by the Earth’s main issue: climate change. It’s as big as the planet itself and we’ve hardly begun to do things about it. During my lifetime, the Earth’s human population has grown from less than three billion to almost seven and a quarter billion. We are all breathing and burning the Earth’s one thin atmosphere. If you could somehow drive a car straight up, you’d be in outer space in less than an hour. That’s the problem, everyone: A great many people and not all that much air to live in.

Often people ask me “What can I do about climate change?” Well madams and sirs, this Earth Day, just talk about it. Talk about climate change. Earth Day’s purpose was and is to raise awareness, to get people fired up. We are living in an extraordinary time. The climate science is clear, yet many of our leaders succeed in denying it. They run for government office, but seem to hate government and what we can do together. By talking about pollution and climate change on Earth Day, we can turn things around. I hope this year more of us than ever are talking so that more of us are more aware than ever of what we are doing to the air we share. Together, we can change the world.

OMG! Expert on killer robots rails against the rise of the machines

Killer robots are not just the nightmarish scenario from a sci-fi movie fantasy: the prospect of lethal machines obliterating mankind is under discussion at a major U.N. multilateral meeting in Geneva. Mary Wareham, coordinator of the "Campaign to Stop Killer Robots" initiative at Human Rights Watch, talks to Metro.

Mary Wareham / MWN

Killer robots — what's all the fuss about?

There are serious ethical, legal, technical and operational concerns at the prospect of weapons systems that would select and attack targets without further human intervention. What's paramount is an objection to giving a machine the power to — on its own — take a human life on the battlefield or in law enforcement and other situations.

What other drawbacks are there?

Fully autonomous weapons would be prone to many possible failures including malfunctions, communications degradation, software coding errors, enemy cyber attacks or infiltration into the industrial supply chain, jamming, spoofing, decoys, other enemy countermeasures or actions.

Would such a machine be truly autonomous, completely free-thinking?

Once deployed, they would be able to select and fire on targets without meaningful human control. Although they do not yet exist yet, the development of precursors and military planning documents indicate that technology is moving rapidly in that direction.

Surely all of their operations would be lawful?

There are grave doubts that fully autonomous weapons could ever replicate human judgment and comply with the legal requirement to distinguish civilian from military targets. They would be prone to cause civilian casualties in violation of international humanitarian law.

Can Bieber top his terrible Coachella behavior for weekend No. 2?

Reenacting last weekend's choke hold with Chris Brown. / ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

We've still got another weekend of the massive Coachella music festival to look forward to, so maybe Justin Bieber isn't quite done yet vying for the title of most obnoxious person at the world's largest gathering of obnoxious people. Not that he needs to try, as on the first weekend of the fest he already put in such spectacular work. I'm not sure which part is my favorite. When he tried to force his way into a VIP section during Drake's performance and got put in a choke hold and forced out by security? Pretty fun. Or how about when security at another event wouldn't let Kendall Jenner in because she's under 21 and Bieber "threw a fit" and "caused an enormous scene"? Also good. Or how about reports that Jenner was overheard saying "Justin's a d-bag" after he treated her "like a hanger-on" and later "brought girl after girl to his room," according to In Touch? All solid efforts. But really, I think he's just getting warmed up. Certainly he has more tricks up his sleeve, like pushing a person in a wheelchair out of the way or setting fire to a nearby animal shelter. Your move, Bieber.

Be careful what secrets you tell your friends. That's the lesson One Direction member Harry Styles is learning after pal Ed Sheeran gave a candid interview to a New Zealand outlet in which he revealed that Styles leaked his own nude photo back in 2012, despite the fact that Styles denied it at the time. (Of course he did.) "Did you know that Harry leaked that picture himself? He leaked his own picture. I think that's amazing," Sheeran tells ZM Online. "He was just like, 'No one knows, so I'm just going to tell them.'" And if viral visual evidence isn't enough confirmation for you, Sheeran — who wrote One Direction's hit "Little Things" — would like the world to know that Styles is in fact quite well-endowed. In case you were wondering. "[Harry] definitely hasn't got a little thing, so no, I did not write 'Little Things' about little things," he says.

That epic '90s Sizzler ad everyone is talking about

This is why YouTube was created. When you think about America and freedom, you obviously think surf and turf, right? What feels like a "Too Many Cooks"-style parody is actually an awkwardly authentic nearly five-minute promotional video for Sizzler from 1991, a time when a "quiet revolution has been taking place" across America, according to the earnest narrator. As your new favorite song intones, "Sizzler is the one who brings us choices, reaching out across the USA. Each and every day, get a little freedom in your life." Damn straight. Almost brings a tear to your eye.

RACHEL REDHOUSE, YOUTUBE

'Cabin in Woods' coming back to bite Joss Whedon

ALAN MARKFIELD

There might be a very good reason that Joss Whedon has seemed beleaguered and exhausted while promoting "Avengers: Age of Ultron." He's also facing down a $10 million lawsuit over his and Drew Goddard's delightful 2012 horror-comedy "The Cabin in the Woods." Peter Gallagher — not the actor, as it turns out — claims Whedon and Goddard ripped off the idea for the genre-bending film from his 2006 novel "The Little White Trip: A Night in the Pines," and he wants them to pay up. Detailing how the two are similar would be risking spoilers, but there is this: Gallagher "self-published" the book and sold it around Venice Beach and Santa Monica. "The defendants currently reside and operate out of Santa Monica, California, a short distance from where the book was sold," the complaint reads, according to the Hollywood Reporter. Sounds like a slam-dunk case to me, your honor.

Sticks and stones won't hurt him

Interview. Kevin Dunn talks about playing enjoyably depressive Ben Cafferty on "Veep."

Character actor Kevin Dunn didn't start appearing on "Veep" as cynical, depressive, Scotch-swilling Presidential Chief of Staff Ben Cafferty until the second season, and wasn't a regular until the third. Now that the show has begun its fourth go-round, Dunn reflects on a character who fits right in with all the pessimism and diamond-cut insults.

Given that so many of the writers of "Veep" are from the U.K., do you often have to advise them on American culture?

Sometimes we'll say, "I think this is too British." But they're pretty savvy guys. Frank Rich is on the show basically all the time, and he's always aware of anything that might not scan correctly.

How do you think Ben has changed?

Over the course of this presidency he's become really disillusioned. His friends turned out not to be who he thought they were. If he really didn't know he was a manic-depressive, he certainly found out. [Laughs]

You had a key role in 1993's "Dave," which is a far nicer comedy about politics. It's amazing how much political comedy has changed.

Twenty years ago, we would be shocked by how far politics has devolved into fights. But there's so much more comedy you can mine from politics now. It's so much easier. It's all really there. There's no longer this fraternal feeling that Congress used to have — "My esteemed colleague" and so on. Now they're yelling during presidential States of the Union. It makes for great comedy. It's depressing, but it makes for great comedy.

Still, it's not as intense as it is in England. Everyone on "The Thick of It," the British show that wrought "Veep," is very hostile to each other, whereas in America the hostility is often cloaked in fake-politeness.

I love to watch Parliament in session because they're just constantly heckling each other and booing each other. It's so out in the open, this hostility. Here it's just masked, but in Britain everything is out there. Their hatred for each other is on full view. You can watch clips of David Cameron when Tony Blair was up there and he would just be screaming at him. Just crazy.

Bad words

Insults

One of the most notable parts of the show, as well as of "The Thick of It" and its movie spin-off "In the Loop," are those profanity-laden insults, some of which are tailor-made for the actors. How do you feel about them?

[The writers] are just kind of fearless. They'll attack anything. They'll attack the way a person looks, the way a person sounds. There's just this no holds barred taking of the piss. It's like a really dysfunctional family that's always choosing sides. There were six of us in my family, and it was always about who was conspiring against who. My brother would be my best friend one day and be conspiring against me with my sister the next day. It's very much like that. It's all about surviving.

Bob Saget: 'I'm not even that raunchy'

Interview. The comedian doesn't resent getting confused with Danny Tanner — at least, not that much.

You probably knew him first as the endearingly dorky dad of three on "Full House" — then had a jaw-dropping moment when "The Aristocrats" came out, and Bob Saget told the filthiest, raunchiest joke you ever heard. Nowadays, he's somewhere in between. We chatted with Saget while he was prepping for a short comedy tour, including stops in New York and in his hometown, Philadelphia.

I'm from Philly, too. Philly crowds are the best, right?

They're pretty high up there. You can't be disingenuous with a Philadelphia audience. And it's my hometown — every person looks at you and goes, "Pat's or Geno's?" [rival cheesesteak stands] and stares into your eyes because they want to know the truth.

I can't see your eyes since we're on the phone — should I even bother asking which? You could be lying.
I've had good ones at Pat's and at Geno's. That sounds like I'm a total kiss up.

Do you think at this point everyone buying tickets to see you knows how raunchy your act can get?

I'm not even that raunchy. I'm so much less raunchy than everyone else who's doing it — people are a lot filthier than me now. It started with an HBO special called "That Ain't Right" in 2007, and I must have said "f—" 300 times. That's the one that was definable as, "Oh my god, that's not the dad from 'Full House!'" Which is just absurd because that's a character I played on a TV show.

Bob Saget is at the Best Buy Theater on Thursday and the NYCB Theatre at Westbury on Friday. / NATALIE BRASINGTON

Comedy

So what can we expect from the upcoming shows?

Well, it's kind of what I've been doing for the past 35 years.

OK, so just sum that up for me — 35 years of your life.

I'm very positive these days. Everybody's in a very negative zone, and they're into very critically putting things down. ... My stuff may be a bit irreverent, but it was never meant to be hurtful. I don't do a roast. ... I have different stories I want to share. Some of them are personal. So I mix jokes with — well, analyzing your comedy, for anyone, is the kiss of death. Just show up.

Quoted

"People are a lot filthier than me now." Saget

I think people didn't realize there was acting involved — which just makes no sense.

Could we call that a testament to your acting skills?

Exactly. At this age, I've turned it into "What an amazing actor I am. It's an homage to me." [Laughs] But I've also grown, through many years, to understand that it's a gift. To not draw any attention to it, to pretend I wasn't on one of the most famous family sitcoms of all time, would just be ludicrous.

This week's #EqualPayDay was a day to promote awareness of the gender gap in wages. Women still make an average of 78 cents for every dollar that a man does, and it's a damn crappy statistic. Sadly, a 1972 PSA for the Department of Labor from "Batgirl" that surfaced recently just points out how little progress we've actually made since then.

I was recently having a discussion about "Game of Thrones" with someone who didn't understand why I loved a show in which women were oppressed in a fictional culture as much as I do feminist fantasy shows, including "Xena: Warrior Princess" or "Battlestar Galactica" and "Caprica," where gender doesn't seem to matter at all.

It's rough to be a feminist these days. It seems like we're backsliding as a culture and the word doesn't mean the same thing to everyone. It's frustrating to watch female characters serve as a plot point rather than a real person in show after show and film after film. For every Katniss, there is a Bella, and so on and so forth.

That said, you often get backlash when you complain about a character with no personality who gives up everything for a man. There are times when you have a little debate with yourself before pointing something like that out because of the negative response you're likely to get.

So here is why I love things like "Game of Thrones" and fantasy worlds that may mimic Renaissance or medieval society, where women were often oppressed. It's because the ones who fight back really fight! Arya Stark takes no crap from anyone. Sure, it's turning her into a little killer, but it's cathartic to watch someone fight like hell and not care what anyone thinks. I may want to run someone through with a sword after yet another "You don't look like a geek," but society frowns upon that. Living vicariously through someone who can fight back 100 percent against misogyny can be as satisfying to the soul as watching Xena destroy her enemies and no one thinking it's strange because she's got lady parts.

Tove Lo

"Habits" singer Tove Lo kicked off festival season at SXSW and has a long summer with little sleep and lots of performing ahead of her. As far as pop stars go, she's as low maintenance as it gets — she typically performs barefoot — but there are a few beauty must-haves she relies on to get through the summer:

"I always have concealer," she says. "When you're at a festival, you tend to have a lot of fun, so you need something to cover up the dark circles under your eyes."

Another item on her packing list: Flash tattoos. "You don't want to bring expensive jewelry to a music festival — trust me, I always wear a lot of rings and have lost all of them — so flash tattoos are a very good thing."

The last items on her list: Bronzer and mascara. "I don't need to look glamorous, I just want to look fresh," she says.

Katie Jayne Earl says being the only girl in the seven-person band has only made her embrace femininity more. "It's a really mellow smell and really refreshing. I put it on before I do my makeup, when I get out of the shower and when I'm sweating after a show." Shh, no one will know you haven't showered in days.

There's also an accessory Earl always has with her at festivals: A fanny-pack. "I super recommend it," she says. "You can fit everything you need right there."

Egg on your plate

going out

DRINK & PLAY

'Tis the season when a young New Yorker's fancy turns to thoughts of brunch. Here are five dishes dialing up the egg game.

EVA KIS

Egg Shop B.E.C.

Egg Shop, 151 Elizabeth St.
Eggshopnyc.com

This Nolita spot will turn your mood sunny side up before you even take a bite of the breakfast sandwich that claimed a spot on several of last year's best-of lists. The bacon, egg and cheese concept gets an upgrade with a gooey free-range egg, sea salt-topped roll and a spicy tomato jam that will make you never want ketchup again.

Breakfast Ramen

Talde Brooklyn,
369 Seventh Ave., Park Slope
Taldebrooklyn.com

The key to a great bowl of ramen (breakfast or otherwise) is a soft-boiled egg yolk that you swirl into the soup before eating. This dish takes all the parts of a complete breakfast and turns them into components of a ramen bowl: buttered toast broth, honey-glazed bacon and a six-minute egg over noodles.

China-quiles

Fung Tu, 22 Orchard St.
Fungtu.com

Chef Jonathan Wu's riff on the Mexican chilaquiles (a classic hangover cure) features steamed egg custard (a traditional Chinese breakfast dish) topped with yucca chips and smothered in Sichuan pork sauce. It's garnished with scallions and cilantro, so you can even tell your mom you ate something green today.

Baked Eggs

Gemma, 335 Bowery
Theboweryhotel.com

This is the dish we braved winter mornings to eat, made even better thanks to the restaurant's old-world Italian decor. Baked eggs sit in a skillet of savory, tangy tomato sauce, with Fontina cheese, prosciutto and avocado that we usually save for a breakfast sandwich on the accompanying Tuscan toast.

Eggs Rothko

Egg, 109 N. Third St.,
Williamsburg
Eggrestaurant.com

The original egg-focused spot still packs them in with this dish, a poached egg on brioche bread with Grafton cheddar that ascends to a whole new level with the optional candied bacon (there's a choice of seasonal vegetables or meat, but let's be real). The hash browns here are also a worthy accompaniment.

On your radar

Tex-Mex finally treks north at Javelina

If you think tacos should crunch, let Javelina change your mind.

The surefire hit of the new Union Square Tex-Mex spot: the San Antonio Puffy Tacos. The shell, soft and flaky like a croissant, but dense and lightly fried, is the perfect vehicle for the marinated pork and cotija cheese filling.

Owner and Dallas native Matt Post has been trying to sniff out Tex-Mex (the Tex part is American ingredients, the Mex is south-of-the-border cooking traditions) since moving to the city in 2005. When he would ask for recommendations, "people would just sigh and shrug like you asked about their dead dog," he says.

So he opened a restaurant serving all of his favorite things from home, with former Rosa Mexicano chef Richard Caruso behind the counter. There are four kinds of queso, including a white variety with poblano peppers that doesn't shy away from spice. Indeed, a lot of the menu will come as a surprise to those used to mainstream Mexican restaurants — the outstanding Stacked Enchiladas with pork is a massive portion of assertive flavors that you'll want to ask for a couple of extra napkins to handle. And while we're not sold on cactus as a food, avocado and cilantro in a margarita was a unique (in a good way) change-up to the ubiquitous drink.

Meals at Javelina end with free sopapillas, the triangles of airy dough lightly dusted with sugar. (There are no other desserts, not that you'd have room for them.) And on tap is a newcomer to NYC: the Texas-brewed amber ale Shiner Bock. Javelina also launched brunch service recently, with customizable breakfast tacos as the centerpiece ("That's like an obsession for Texans," Post says.)

We recommend making a reservation — the restaurant was full throughout a recent Tuesday dinner service — but bidding your time at the bar with a sangria swirl margarita is a valid option, too. Eva Kis

Behind the music with The Mowgli's

Katie Jayne Earl shares the stories behind three songs off their new album, "Kids In Love."

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@metro.us

California alt-rock band The Mowgli's are known for their feel-good hits, like "San Francisco" and "Say It, Just Say It." The good vibes continue with their new album, "Kids In Love." We talk to band member Katie Jayne Earl about the deeper meaning behind three of the album's standout tracks.

'Kids In Love'

With the title track, Earl says the idea was to portray love at its purest: "We were trying to encapsulate that unjaded, very open-eyed image of love [you have] when you're a kid." She wants fans to know that even if you've had your heart broken and think you have nothing left to give, you'll recapture that feeling. "It's [somewhere] we can all get back to," she says. "There are people in your life that can take you back to that 'kid in love' place, and it's a pretty special place."

Katie Jayne Earl tells us that being the only woman in The Mowgli's has made her embrace femininity even more. PROVIDED

"We were trying to encapsulate that unjaded, very open-eyed image of love [you have] when you're a kid."

Earl, about "Kids in Love"

'Through the Dark'

This track may seem a bit more somber than the group's usual sunny songs, but Earl says it still has their classic message, just from a different angle. "All of us [in the band] have been through a lot over the past couple years — and in life in general — and it's about the idea that there's a light at the end of the tunnel," she says. "If you're the best version of yourself, you can shine through any darkness that comes your way. It's a reminder to love more and shine as bright as you can."

Going green in Singapore

Singapore Botanic Gardens

As Singapore gears up to celebrate 50 years of independence, we take a look at one of the unexpected highlights of this dynamic city-state: its green spaces.

Singapore's parks and gardens are one of its great delights, surprising visitors who expect to see only a modern urban metropolis. One of the biggest and best is the Singapore Botanic Gardens (www.sbg.org.sg), with 183 acres open to the public every day of the year.

The lush and colorful gardens, alive with tropical plants and trees, are free, except for the National Orchid Garden, which is located within the Botanic Gardens.

The Orchid Garden has over 60,000 orchids on display, artfully arranged so that the predominant colors change with the seasons. There are over 1,000 different species of orchid and an additional 2,000 orchid hybrids. The orchid breeding program started here back in 1928, and some of the hybrids can be seen in the Celebrity Orchid Garden. They honor people like the actor Jackie Chan and the primatologist Jane Goodall, who contributed to the work of the garden. In the VIP Orchid Garden, hybrids have been named after notable visitors to Singapore, so here you'll find orchids like Dendrobium Margaret Thatcher and Dendrobium Joe and Jill Biden.

In addition to the Orchid Garden there's a Ginger Garden, with several hundred species of ginger plants, a delightful Bonsai Garden, numerous outdoor sculptures (including hidden creatures in the undergrowth) and the Jacob Ballas Children's Garden with tree houses, a maze, slides, bridges, and lots of fun things the whole family to do.

To the people of Singapore

Orchid Garden

Labrador Nature Reserve

the Botanic Gardens, which were established in 1859, are as important as Central Park to New Yorkers or Hyde Park to Londoners. Don't miss them.

Other green spaces

The Botanic Gardens are only one of Singapore's many green areas. Use the city's widespread Park Connector Network (www.nparks.gov.sg/gardens-parks-and-nature/park-connector-network) to visit some of the others.

Gardens by the Bay

One of the newer and more spectacular green

Gardens by the Bay

initiatives in Singapore, the development of this 250-acre space is ongoing. It includes lakes, an aerial walkway, a children's garden and the remarkable Supertree Grove, where artificial trees up to six stories high act as vertical gardens during the day and host light shows at night.

Changi Beach Park

This is just one of Singapore's several attractive coastal parks, with white-sand beaches, coconut trees, hiking and biking trails, BBQ pits and a bistro.

Labrador Nature Reserve

Singapore also has several nature reserves including this one, whose sea cliffs are home to dozens of bird species including parrots and woodpeckers as well as sea birds.

Amish culture and more in Lancaster

Horse-drawn buggies, bearded men in dark coveralls, women in bonnets and English spoken with a distinct accent are everywhere in Lancaster, the heart of the Amish/Pennsylvania Dutch community. ("Dutch" is actually a corruption of Deutsch, as in German.) The Amish — religious refugees from Switzerland and Germany — speak a German dialect, live in tightly knit communities and avoid most technology.

To learn more about their culture, visit the Amish Farm and House (www.amishfarmandhouse.com) and the Amish Village (www.theamishvillage.net). You'll see

You can also take a traditional buggy ride. (The Amish are offended at being photographed, so please be respectful.)

A springtime tradition is the “mud sales.” So called because spring means mud to farmers, these auctions are held on Saturdays through May. Open to all, you’ll find many Amish folks buying and selling quilts, crafts, buggies, building supplies, tools and livestock. See the schedule at www.discoverlancaester.com/mudsales.

Food is a large part of the Amish experience. The Good 'N Plenty Restaurant (www.goodnplenty.com) in Smoketown is famous for its family-style meals.

There is no sales tax on clothing in Pennsylvania, which is just one reason to visit the Tanger and Rockvale outlet malls for designer labels. Downtown Lancaster has boutiques and specialty stores. Antiquers migrate to Adamstown, which boasts 5,000 dealers along a 5-mile stretch of road.

Lancaster also has arts venues, including the Fulton Theatre (www.thefulton.org), the oldest continuously operating theater in the country.

Marathon bomber Tsarnaev had a choice—his victims didn't

Dzhokhar Tsarnaev had a choice. He could have approached anyone in the crowd at the Boston Marathon's finish line to ask for protection from the perceived anger of his older brother, Tamerlan Tsarnaev.

Lu Lingzi, Krystle Campbell, Richard Martin, Shawn Collier and over 260 others did not have a choice. While Lu Lingzi, Krystle Campbell, Richard Martin, and Shawn Collier are not here to share with us what they felt during their final moments, the ladies and gentlemen of the jury had an opportunity to hear the testimonies of the injured who were forced to piece their lives together by facing unprecedented physical, psychological, and emotional health obstacles with the support of their loved ones.

The ladies and gentlemen of the jury did not hear a word of remorse from Dzhokhar Tsarnaev.

'Selfish' Floyd

One of Manny Pacquiao's reps and Hall of Fame trainer Freddie Roach went off on the antics of Floyd Mayweather this week. "Mayweather is a different 'A' side now, and you can guess what the 'A' stands for," Roach said. "He was late for his media workout, leaving major outlets scheduled to go live with dead air. How selfish is that? It doesn't take a lot to figure out why everyone is rooting for Manny."

Islanders take home ice right off the bat

NHL. The Islanders swiped Game 1 from the Capitals with a 4-1 victory.

The NHL playoffs officially kicked off when the puck hit the ice at the Verizon Center in D.C. last night and the Islanders and Capitals once again made it clear that postseason hockey is an entirely different animal than the relatively apathetic regular season. Washington came into Game 1 the hotter group, as it had gone 9-3-1 over its last 13 regular season games, but it was the Islanders who grabbed the early series momentum as they beat the Caps soundly, 4-1.

The Isles did a terrific job limiting Washington's goal-scoring machine, Alexander Ovechkin, as the Russian finished the game a minus-2. He had a team-high eight shots on goal but none got by New York netminder Jaroslav Halak, who finished Game 1 with 25 saves. His counterpart in net, Washington's Braden Holtby, recorded 23 saves.

Frans Nielsen) each beat Holtby.

With those tallies, the Islanders carried a 3-1 lead into the third period.

Brock Nelson got the scoring underway for the Islanders six minutes into the first period with Bailey and Johnny Boychuk assisting on the score. Washington's Marcus Johansson knotted things up, 1-1, late in the first period but it was the only time the Caps would beat Halak.

The Mets continue their homestand Thursday (7 p.m., SNY) as they welcome the Miami Marlins to town. Miami is fresh off a 6-2 victory over Atlanta, but owns just a 3-6 record.

Rangers ready to roll

NHL. Game 1 of Rangers-Penguins is tonight at Madison Square Garden.

Yes, the New York Rangers are acutely aware that they enter the Stanley Cup playoffs as the odds-on favorite to win the Stanley Cup.

They are also aware that the Presidents' Trophy and predictions from oddsmakers do not guarantee anything other than home ice throughout the tournament.

"I think we're ready to start in here," Rangers defenseman Dan Girardi said after practice Wednesday.

Game No. 1 of the first-round series against the Penguins is set for tonight (7 p.m., MSG) at the Garden, and many in the hockey world are expecting the Rangers to advance in short order. Pittsburgh enters the series having lost 11 of its last 15 games, and due to salary cap mismanagement and injuries the Penguins were limited to dressing five defensemen in seven games at the end of the season.

Their loss to the Rangers in last year's postseason caused a seismic reaction within the Penguins organization as then-general manager Ray Shero and coach Dan Bylsma were fired, replaced by Jim Rutherford and Mike Johnston, respectively.

The personnel changes

Rangers schedule

A look at what's ahead for the Rangers:

- Game 1 at Rangers: Tonight, 7 p.m.
- Game 2 at Rangers: Saturday, 8 p.m.
- Game 3 at Penguins: Monday, 7 p.m.
- Game 4 at Penguins: Wednesday, 7 p.m.
- Game 5 at Rangers: Friday, April 22 (TBA)
- Game 6 at Penguins: Sunday, April 26 (TBA)
- Game 7 at Rangers: Tuesday, April 28 (TBA)

did not bring about the desired results, as Pittsburgh qualified for the playoffs on the final day of the regular season with a 43-27-12 record. Despite the presence of Sidney Crosby and Evgeni Malkin, the Penguins' 2.65 goals per game ranked 19th in the NHL.

Moreover, the Penguins enter the playoffs decidedly shorthanded on defense. Wednesday, it was announced that Christian Ehrhoff will not play Thursday night due to an upper-body injury. Ehrhoff's injury significantly weakens a back six that already does not have Kris Letang and Olli Maatta.
